OWs LISA MCPHERSON

1. I blew off my responsibility to my commitment on WW and worked on a 2D ethics pgm instead.

2. Mid September 95 at my apartment. Just after I attested to Clear and was at home with Jeff Litton after graduation. I was looking at what had transpired between he and I over the past year and what the current scene was and became involved in creating on that instead of what I had committed to, Winter Wonderland donations. That following week I was on course and concerning myself with course and Jeff, I discovered that he and I were not in fact compatible at all. I spotted a long term unhandled out-ethics situation with myself on the 2D. I immediately jumped into handling it with no concern or attention on the WW project I had committed to. I went racing off to the MAA with my own ethics program in hand at what all I had intended to do to handle it. I got with my friend and made her aware of the situation so I would have a terminal. I went off to the races on a time consuming program to handle that situation instead of the one pressing the hardest on mine and Bennetta's lines. I spent a full weekend working out the handling for that instead of WW. I spent time in the MAA s office doing nothing on WW although that is what my greatest priority was. My create time was tied up on this instead of WW. I lost another 2 weeks of vital fund raising time dicking around on course and this 2D scene. This put undue stress on the people who were working on the project, TC, Bennetta, Marlene. This created lost production time and forced pressure on other things that should have been being created instead of money (i.e. entertainment, site stuff etc.). This contributed to putting the entire project in a Hill 10 which is what we were trying to avoid by getting started so early. This put the project at risk by not being on schedule things may get missed that are vital to its production. I caused at least $5000 of donos by not working on this cycle during this week. This contributed to heavy intervention by Bennetta to try and avert a disaster.

1. I abandoned my responsibility to WW and dumped my hat on Bennetta.

2. As soon as I attested to Clear in September at Flag. I immediately got scheduled to go on course on a schedule of 2 days then 3 days per week. I went to course and studied for my own personal enhancement and worked very hard to put that schedule in. I did not do anything in the direction of getting Winter Wonderland done. I went on course on the weekdays and weekend and did not create on WW at all. I not-is'd it during this time. I ignored my responsibility and left it up to Bennetta to handle. I looked at it a couple of times and what was happening and I'd see where not enough was happening but then I just created the idea that Bennetta would handle it all and that when she needed me to really get busy she would let me know and used that to justify not doing my part. Once I was in my room getting dressed to go to the OT Committee and I looked at what I had not done on the project and my next almost immediate thought was yes, but Bennetta is working on it so I don't have to do as much, another justification. I was trying to hide from the project by going on course and looking busy. Now it's time to go full steam ahead on all the other activities and there is not enough money to do what needs to be done. Bennetta has spent time wearing my hat and doing my job when she really needed to be working on the other things that needed to be done. The project is now at risk because of my neglect.

- What was the overt I BLEW OFF MY RESPONSIBILITY TO M*
1. I saw people in the course room studying and I did not say anything to them or even attempt to put a comm line in with them to help with WW. PROTECT AND DID NOT DO WHAT I'D COMMITTED TO
 2. During my course time in September 95. Once it was on a Thursday pm and I was in the course room at the SC listening to roll call. I looked around the room at who was there and thought I had better talk to some of them about WW and fundraising. I dismissed the thought and went back to being a student. I shrunk on WW. I knew I was blowing and did nothing to get my ethics in on it. I got more out of ARC with the project and felt more individuated from it. I did less than was required to get the job done. I failed my team members who trusted me to do the job. I left a hole in the project that everyone thought was being filled. This created a hill 10 later when I had to be bypassed. The EDS staff had to be pulled off their hats to do my post. We are now way late on the balance of the funds and it's a sit for sure. The entire WW staff is PTPd with my post.

1. I blew from fund raising for WW and wasted reg time.

2. One Sunday at the OT Committee meeting. I sat through the entire meeting without any create on WW happening at all. I listened to what the speaker was saying and thought a little (very little) about what I was going to say but I had not done any planning on what my approach would be or how I could best utilize the group or anything. I just sat in the chair with my thumb up my butt on WW. I got involved with the OTC stuff and pitched in to help on that, but when the time came to make my announcement I did so weakly and without real conviction for what I was doing. I just sort of half heartedly made an announcement then I ran out after the meeting to keep from having to confront anyone on the project for real. I felt like shit. I blew and I lost another full evening of production time and accomplished nothing. Another opportunity was missed that would have brought in at least $500 for the time I spent. Production time was lost, dev-t was created in me not wearing my hat.
